Rapid tests compulsory for all incoming travelers

By: Nanai Taofiga Laveitiga Tuiletufuga

In effect immediately, all incoming travelers must produce a negative rapid tests results before they are allowed to board a flight to Samoa. The test must be conducted 24 hours before arrival.

The new requirement, announced by Deputy Director General of Health Tagaloa Dr. Robert Thompson is among the new mandates put in place to protect Samoa from possible entry of the new Omicron BA.2, BA.4 and BA.5 variants reportedly have surfaced in neighboring American Samoa, New Zealand and Australia.

"We are aware of the presence of these new Omicron variants in American Samoa, New Zealand and Australia," Tagaloa acknowledged during a joint Press Conference with Disaster Advisory Committee Chairman and N.E.O.C. Chairman Agafili Tomaimano Shem Leo yesterday afternoon. But for Samoa, the samples send to Wellington for testing and sequencing has verified that Omicron BA.1 remain the sole variant in the country.

"We are presently looking at protocols to strengthen our border protection from these new variants and Cabinet will be advised," he added.

Keeping the new threats from further endangering the lives of residents is a universal responsibility for all residents, added Agafili. "Our best defense is our vaccination," added the D.A.C. Chairman noting that while the coverage of 18 year olds to adults who have completed their 2 doses is in the neighborhood of 93% of the eligible population of close to 130,000 he is reiterating public pleas for those who have yet to receive the vaccines or have not completed their two doses not to be left behind.

The second dose for 5 years old to 17 years are planned to start by the end of the month to meet the 4 week between doses requirement for the vaccines to be effective.

As published by the Ministry of the Health, the last three deaths are residents who have not had their vaccines to protect them from the deadly virus.

(More issues raised during the Press Conference will be disseminated via the Savali emailing network and our Social Media Page complemented by the Government of Samoa website in the coming days.)

R.S.E. recruitment slows down for Govt. review

By: Nanai Taofiga Laveitiga Tuietufuga

Government is not stopping the seasonal workers employment program, period. Instead the Minister of Commerce Industry and Labour Leatinu'u Wayne So'oiolo reassured Parliament this week that sending Samoans to work in New Zealand and Australia's horticulture and viticulture industries is being "slowed down" to allow Government to address and iron out the wrinkles which have defeated the purpose of the temporary employment program originally designed exclusively for the unemployed.

The announcement Wednesday has buried fears by the lawmakers that the new Government is shutting down sending thousands of Samoans to New Zealand and Australia for seasonal work as they had promised during the election campaign.

"Government is not shutting down the seasonal employment program but slowing down sending our people overseas for these jobs to allow us time to iron out a number of contract violations," Leatinu'u told the House.

Instead of 3 flights a month to transport seasonal workers to their designated place of employment in New Zealand and Australia, Cabinet has reduced the flights to one each for Down Under and New Zealand per month.

200 SAMOANS AXED FROM SEASONAL EMPLOYMENT

The extend of the problems with the RSE workers can best be said in the 200 plus Samoans hired as Seasonal Workers who have since been fired for violating the conditions of their employment contracts.

"There are 18 new mums with new born babies returning on a special flight bringing home over 200 Samoan seasonal workers who have violated the condition of their employment," the Minister told the House.

"Other contract infringements include failure to report to work and serious behavioral conduct which forced employers to terminate their employment," he added. (O i latou nei ua aveva ma fa'aftauli ile polokalame," Leatinu'u said in Samoan in Parliament.)

More pressing, the Minister continued is over 8,000 Samoan RSE workers who have completed their employment are stranded in New Zealand.

He said that one of the biggest setbacks is the selection process which appears to be dominated by staff in selecting the workers who applied.

"There are cases where an applicant is on the waiting list for over 2 years but a new applicant is picked a month after he filed his paperwork," the Minister noted.

"With 8,000 job opportunities in seasonal jobs, a fairer selection process is for each of the 51 electoral constituency to be allocated 157 jobs each," he suggested.

CABINET APPOINTS REVIEW COMMITTEE.

To clean house the RSE recruitment process, Leatinu'u told Parliament that Cabinet has approved the establishment of a Committee with members drawn from the Public and Private Sector.

Armed with a Term of Reference, the committee will be led by MCIL and its members include representatives from;

Ministry of Prime Minister and Cabinet, (M.P.M.C.)
Ministry of Women Community and Social Development, (M.C.S.D.)

New Zealand High Commission
Australia's High Commission
International Labor Organization, (I.L.O.)
Samoa Chamber of Commerce
Samoa Workers Congress
Private Recruiters

The Committee's findings and recommendations are to be submitted to Cabinet for its deliberations and final determination.

Minimum wage review

By: Nanai Taofiga Laveitiga Tuiletufuga

Government over the years have been haunted by none government organisations, workers and employee associations to increase Samoa's minimum wage to be the same or in close range of neighboring countries.

But oblivious to the uninformed critics is the fact that increasing Samoa's minimum wage was mostly due to the ability of the private sector to pay the increases.

As a remedy the Minister of Commerce Industry and Labor Leatinu'u Wayne So'oialo revealed in Parliament this week a new regulation now included in the law requiring all businesses to review the wages and salaries for employees and staff including their minimum wages rates every years.

He said that MCIL will be in charge of monitoring and businesses which do not comply will be subject to appropriate remedies provided by law.

Leatinu'u told the House that a recent MCIL survey also found that the majority of the private sector are earning above the minimum wage of $3 tala an hour.

The last minimum wage increase of 70 sene an hour from $2:30 an hour went into effect in 2020.

Frontline stories behind the scenes of Samoa's border security

ACEO Segialii Marie Malaki Faafo

PR - In mid March this year, life in Samoa took another dramatic turn in its Covid-19 journey when the country recorded its first confirmed case by community transmission.

As expected there were moments of chaos and confusion as the country transitioned into the new reality of living with Covid-19 and while life for most house bound people came to a standstill; the work for the country's front-line essential workers had just begun.

From retail workers, police officers, to health personnel and border security - it was these unsung heroes of the Covid pandemic who put themselves in immediate danger to ensure the nation was fed and protected while keeping the wheels of our economy turning.

While it was easy to spot most of these essential workers during opening hours when locals hit the shops for supplies, some were less visible like the bio-security officials perilously positioned at Samoa's border where they worked to clear cargo, mail parcels, plants and animal products.

Samoa's biosecurity system protects agriculture, forestry and fisheries export industries as well as the tourism sector and environmental assets and with that thousands of jobs. Without the commitment and hard work of the men and women in the Ministry of Agriculture and Fisheries' Quarantine division, Samoa's way of life is constantly at risk.

No-one knows this more than the woman leading the Quarantine and Bio-security Division through one of the most unprecedented times in history. For the last two years of her term, ACEO Segialii Marie Malaki-Fa'aofo has been working behind the scenes with her team to identify bio-security risks and take action to eliminate them.

"We are island people, we are self-reliant, and we rely heavily on our environment to support our livelihoods. Attempts to eradicate or control established invasive species, pests and diseases are usually expensive, take a lot of effort, and are often unsuccessful" said Segialii.

"Spending a relatively small amount of resources on prevention is always better than the large amount of resources required for a cure. Preventing the passage of species across borders, and especially across the natural boundaries between islands isolated by ocean, is the most cost-effective way of managing the threat they pose."

According to Segialii, observing how COVID-19 spread around the globe in the last two years has helped her division understand biosecurity better.

"The principles of barrier gestures, isolation, quarantine, and prevention to slow the spread of a virus are similar to the measures used to prevent, slow down, and eradicate an invasive species. Just as we wash our hands to avoid passing on a virus, we can clean our hiking boots, car tyres, and cargo containers to avoid passing on invasive species, diseases and pests," she said.

"Part of my vision is to educate the community in an engaging, interactive and relevant way to help spread the message that biosecurity is a shared responsibility and we all have a role to play in protecting our economy, environment and community from pests, diseases, weeds and contaminants."

Despite the current health crisis in Samoa, Segialii is still striving towards her career goal of initiating developments to support biosecurity works within the country to help prevent or mitigate health crises in the future,

“Quarantine has been advocating the safety measures to protect Samoa from the introduction of many diseases and pests for so many years but the pandemic has highlighted just how much biosecurity is a top priority. I have never been so inspired with my work and the role that it plays in food-security and protecting our fragile livestock, plant health and environment that we all depend on heavily,” Segialii said.

“If we don’t protect our border, all the hard work of our farmers, the agriculture production and farm developments will be destroyed. The interference to our exports will result in increased unemployment, loss of income and higher cost of living.”

One of the most difficult aspects of being on the front line is navigating the uncertainty that comes with managing an unprecedented health crisis or natural disaster while also taking care of family.

At the start of the Covid-19 lockdown, government officials at the front line had to quickly accept isolation mandates and many have not seen their loved ones or close family members in the last few weeks,

“The most difficult challenge there is I could think of, when positive cases were detected in MIQ and frontline staff were called in for isolation. It was all new to us, that you will leave your children and spouses behind for 3 weeks and you are not sure of what’s going to happen next “she said.

As a devoted wife and mother of 5 children Segialii believes wearing multiple hats and managing the different challenges that come with them as well as the support she receives from family and community only empowers her to rise to challenge of leading her team through unprecedented times.

“As an essential worker, I always work hard to the best of my abilities to supervise the border operations but at the same time attend to my mother duties to my children, contribute to the churches that we both serve as well as our family, culture and social obligations.”

“It takes a whole village to support my role, I’m so grateful to my family and my in-laws for always taking good care of my children while I attend to all the emergencies associated with Biosecurity.”

Hailing from the villages of Vaiala, Lalovaea, Vaivase-uta, and Magiagi, Segialii is a former student of St. Mary’s Primary school and college. She gained a

Frontline stories behind the scenes of Samoa's border security

Bachelor Degree in Agriculture Science from the University of the South Pacific and a Master's Degree in Science majoring in Animal Science and management from the University of Queensland Segialii was one of the first Samoans to undertake this area majoring in breeding technologies during her time.

"I'm very passionate in my area of expertise as there is a limited pool of animal scientist and or animal breeders, veterinarians, agriculturists and researchers in Samoa and the Pacific region," she said.

The opportunity to study overseas is what she calls a blessing as she was able to work with qualified experts, have access to well-equipped facilities to do her research and study in what she described as one of the best universities in the world.

"I really enjoyed the opportunity to learn from experts or students of other countries who were taking higher studies. With their support I was able to fulfill my Master's degree and return to serve my country by utilizing all the knowledge and skills to further develop the Agriculture."

"I have attended workshops, meetings and trainings overseas that have built my confidence and capacity to interact and engage with other countries on many areas on food-security, sustainable agriculture, livestock development, biosecurity border controls and many other aspects associated with Agriculture."

Segialii is the daughter of Leatuavao Ione Malaki and Lusie Seleta Malaki. Leatuavao was a lecturer at the University of the South Pacific where he taught Agriculture Engineering for more than 30 years and has played an instrumental role in shaping his daughter's life and career path.

As a teenager she dreamed of becoming an astronaut or a mechanical engineer but in the end her father's love for agriculture inspired her to pursue a career in a mostly male dominated field of Agriculture Science.

"At the time, I saw a lack of qualified agriculture scientists within Samoa to meet the growing demands of agriculture development. Improving food security and sustainable development in which agriculture plays a critical role is a priority area of the Government of Samoa" she said.

"Through years of studying and working in agriculture, I have come to realize that no matter what you become; all human beings have to "EAT". Whether you are an engineer or doctor or IT – you need food, food comes from farming."

"I will live through the rest of my life to advocate agriculture as a lifetime profession, because when you retire, you can still continue farming and your children will follow through as well. Agriculture is EVERYTHING! It involves your family, you can do it to exercise, grow for your health, and basically gives peace of mind."

As Samoa enters another realm of uncharted waters owing to the spread of Covid-19 within her communities after 2 years of being Covid-free, Segialii knows the mammoth task ahead of the front-liners who are working around the clock to contain the virus at the border and she's grateful to her team who put their trust in her to lead them through this next chapter in Samoa's history.

"I'm so grateful to all the biosecurity frontliners for their sacrifices, whether its 11pm or 2am or 5am in the morning they receive a call – they leave their family and everything behind to serve our nation. My team is the biggest investment of the Government to protect our borders. Hats off to them for having faith and trust in my leadership" she said. "We all come together as a team (beginning of every month) at our prayer devotion which gives us the opportunity to encourage, enlighten and inspire by the word of God to keep going and that we are not alone in this fight."
