Under Siege - 10% Women's Quota

Parliament has approved a recommendation to revisit Samoa's Constitution to clarify the wording of the 10% quota for Women's Seats in the House and how it is calculated. And prior to resubmission to House for debate, approval or denial, Parliament is submitting its recommendations to Cabinet for their input. As readers will recall, the proposed amendment is one of the recommendations tabled by the 2021 General Election Commission of Inquiry calling on the law makers for the entire provision to be removed. The Commissions' recommendation to scrap the Quota is associated to the three-month-long political crisis during the 2021 Post General Election. However, in debating the recommendation, the 10% Women's Quota which is a constitutional amendment, was audibly supported by House Members who argued overwhelmingly to maintain the status quo. And after debate the Chairman of Parliamentary Committee & Deputy Speaker Au'apa'au Mulipola Aloitafua clarified its position, saying the wording of the Constitution on the 10 % women's seats quota was not clear and needs to be amended by the parliament so that it speaks clearly on the formula. Parliament has adjourned and have scheduled to return to session in December.

2 to 3 cyclones likely for Samoa

By: Leota Marc Membrere

If the Samoa Meteorological Division, of the Ministry of Natural Resources and Environment's (M.N.R.E.) cyclone season climate outlook pans out as predicted, Samoa is likely to experience 2 to 3 tropical cyclones this cyclone season.

And so they are strongly encouraging all communities to 'stay vigilant, remain alert and be prepared'. And according to the Samoa Meteorology these cyclones are likely to form in or pass through the 400km radius of Samoa.

That's being revealed in their National Tropical Cyclone (T.C.) and Climate Seasonal Outlook for Samoa 2023/2024 issued 31st October, 2023.

The T.C. covers the months of November to April with peak of the tropical cyclone activity normally experienced from January to March.

It is also predicting that one tropical cyclone may reach Category 3 or greater intensity.

The cyclone risk for Samoa this season compared to all tropical cyclone seasons is "Normal to Above Normal" says the statement.

Expect rainfall most likely to be below normal in the upcoming season with warmer than normal air temperatures for the next six months.

There is also high potential for drought-like conditions and bush fires in drought prone areas it reveals.

The expected number of cyclones predicted are based on statistical analysis and dynamical predictions providing guidance for planning, preparedness and response in the event of a tropical cyclone.

They have also stated that the current El Nino Southern Oscillation (ENSO) status is El Nino, with global climate models predicting this status is likely to remain through to early 2024.

Potential impacts of a tropical cyclone include torrential rainfall, flooding, storm surges, and damaging winds.

The Samoa Meteorology Division has also stated that during El Nino phases, Samoa experiences decreased rainfall leading to drought-like conditions, low sea levels, and increased risk of water-borne diseases due to reduced water availability and poor quality.

"Throughout the 2023–2024 Tropical Cyclone season, all communities are strongly encouraged to stay vigilant, remain alert, and be prepared. It is vital that everyone take heed of Tropical Cyclone alerts, warnings, and advisories whenever they are issued to help prevent loss of life and minimize property damage. Changes in climatic conditions are eminent, therefore, an update to this Tropical Cyclone Outlook will be issued around January 2024," the Samoa Meteorology Division states.

M.O.F. hosts awareness session on Labour Migration Policy

By: Leota Marc Membrere

On Friday, stakeholders and members of Government Ministries met for an awareness session on Samoa's policy for Temporary Labour Migration under the Labour Mobility Schemes of Australia and New Zealand.

According to Associate Minister of Finance Magele Sekati Fiaui in his address the importance of the consultation is to ensure clear understanding of stakeholders and ministries of their role especially the Government's in the implementation of this policy.

Adding that it is an opportunity to voice views to better improve upon the implementation of this policy for the prosperity of our families, villages and especially Samoa.

He said there is no need to reiterate the importance of this development, that has benefited families and communities, "especially the opportunities that your children and our children have had to learn different skills and qualifications while working under this scheme in New Zealand and Australia," Magele says.

However in any development that is a success and benefits there are plenty of challenges.

And that is how the Government views this important development says the Associate Minister.

"We have witnessed the problems in implementation and the various issues that have ascended and it continues to grow"

As a result, says the Associate Minister, "That is the reason that we have come together today (Thursday)."

Government and Cabinet have decided that a stable solution must be laid out to counter some of these issues.

And the proposed policy is intended to guide the temporary migration of Samoans under the Labour Mobility Schemes of Australia, and New Zealand.

There are three core sections of this policy: Purpose and Intent: Presents the Government of Samoa's, concerns, offer, and expectation

Policy Framework: Presents the policy landscape for Labour Mobility in Samoa – Labour and Employment Relations Act (LERA), Labour Migration Policy, Samoa 2040, Pathway for the Development of Samoa (PDS), Memorandum of Understandings with Australia and New Zealand Operating Procedures

Operationalising Intents: Presents the revisions made to the operating procedures incorporating Constituency Committees in the overall process.

According to Magele the policy is a guide for temporary work opportunities for the people of Samoa overseas.

Explaining the three core areas of the policy:

- Welfare
- Safety
- Fair wages

"This is the first session to discuss this policy," says Magele.

"We will continue to present this awareness to our Constituency Committees, especially our partners, such as New Zealand and Australia, for appropriate amendments to the agreements that accompany this Policy."

He says Samoa always looks forward to a stable and safe process for our people who have access to this program.

Magele says the expectation is that all stakeholders involved in this program are aware of the Terms and conditions involving the awareness then to start implementing by the month of July 2024.

As such the second part of the implementation of the policy is scheduled to officially start and the work implemented in July 2024.

The awareness session was held at the TATTE Convention Center on Friday.

P.M. utilises Koko Market Day to call to action the revival of cocoa industry

By: Leota Marc Membrere

Koko farmers and koko businesses gathered together on Friday at the Samoa Tourism Authority (S.T.A.) Fale for Koko Day displaying to the public their wares.

Koko, has been an integral part of our Nation since it was first introduced to the island in the 1800s, so it was no surprise that Samoa celebrated its thriving industry and its significant role in bolstering the economy.

Prime Minister Fiame Naomi Mataafa, in her keynote address at the gathering reiterated the long and rich history of Cocoa to our islands.

She noted that over the years the produce has become an integral part of the Samoan culture, not only as a source of sustenance but as a means of income for countless local households and providing employment opportunities supporting sustainable development.

The theme of Koko Day was "Creating Business Opportunities Through Innovation and Development," and the Prime Minister says it aligns with the collective vision of revitalising and expanding the cocoa industry in Samoa.

"We acknowledge the challenges that this sector has faced in recent times, with fluctuations in market prices, climate change impacts, and changing consumer preferences."

However, Prime Minister Fiame stressed firm belief that, "through innovation, creativity, and collaboration, we can rejuvenate the cocoa market, ensuring its long-term sustainability."

And the event served exactly that purpose – as an opportunity to explore innovative ideas, collaborate, and seek ways to turn challenges into opportunities and a platform for all stakeholders - farmers, researchers, entrepreneurs, policymakers, and investors to come together and collectively contribute to the revival of the cocoa industry in Samoa.

The Prime Minister encouraged all participating to actively engage in discussions, knowledge sharing, and networking.

"Let us seize this opportunity to exchange ideas, forge new partnerships, and inspire one another through our collective passion for cocoa."

Together she added, we can create a road-map for a thriving cocoa industry that not only benefits local households but also contributes significantly to our beloved Samoa's economic growth.

"So, let today be a call to action – a call to revive the cocoa industry in Samoa through innovation, development, and a renewed sense of purpose. Together, we can build a brighter future filled with vast business opportunities and sustainable growth."

Youth are the leaders of tomorrow: Miss Samoa

By: Leota Marc Membre

It is no secret that the youth of today are emerging leaders, and the involvement of youth in today's decision making for the future is something that Miss Samoa Moemoana Safa'ato'a Schwenke has put emphasis on.

A role model in youth leadership, Moemoana, also a climate warrior spoke to the youth and leaders of Samoa during the U.N. Day highlighting empowering youth as key to a better tomorrow.

"Young people here in Samoa are our future leaders and I believe are the strength of our nation."

According to the current Miss Samoa, the youth are the ancestors of tomorrow and the carriers of Samoa's culture that will build on the legacies that have been made for them.

For Moemoana, it has always been an important initiative of hers to make time for and pass on gifts to the next generation.

"When we look after our children, our young people, we lay the foundations for them to one day look after us and we are investing in the continuity of our culture, values, traditions, and the progress of our community here in Samoa," she says.

Witnessing the impacts of climate change first hand, she knows of harsh reality and Moemoana knows that elevating the engagement of our Pasefika youth in matters related to their future particularly in addressing climate change and also women empowerment is of paramount importance.

"Our young do not just represent the challenges of the world, they are also wellsprings of the solutions, the progress, and they are guardians of the aspirations of our future generations, this endeavor is strengthened by the guidance and wisdom that is imparted to us by our elders who equipped us with knowledge, skills, and life lessons," Moemoana told the youth.

And she emphasized that young people hold the key to addressing critical issues that will impact Samoa and the world at large.

And one of the biggest would be climate change with its harsh effects.

"We are not drowning or waiting for help we are the living example to the rest of the world on climate solutions and indigenous local native knowledge is providing answers to the issues that we face today and I believe that you have a crucial role to play in his as well. Their passion, energy, and fresh vision can drive innovative solutions and have potential to drive climate action," she says.

Other than climate change, Moemoana also emphasised on women's economic empowerment which she says is essential for the growth of Samoa.

She explained that it is imperative that people encourage young women to take charge of their destinies by supporting in education, mentorship and opportunities which will empower them to contribute to the prosperities of our entire society.

"Our young people deserve to be in the discussions that concern them because it's fundamentally their future at stake. And when we collaborate with them harmoniously we continue to promote peace. The empowerment of our young people paves the way for the prosperity of all of us," she says.

Moemoana as a youth leaders has utilized arts and culture to amplify her voice which has been very impactful on her life.

"I continue to learn through to today how siva Samoa and siva afi can serve as a portal into our past to inform our present and help us navigate our future as a Samoan person," she says.

"The very first siva Samoa I learnt was when I was five years old and is about the Manumea bird, Samoa's national bird the rare tooth billed pigeon which is sadly on the brink of extinction. I remember how this dance that was taught to me by my mum mimics the movement of the Manumea bird," she says.

The reigning Miss Samoa explained that culture and its manifestation continues to be a powerful weapon and source of inspiration for our young people today.

"I believe by involving our youth in arts and culture like our tamaitai Anofale we ensure that our geneology will live on for generations and we are able to share it with the world.

She added that as Miss Samoa she is very committed to working alongside the youth during her reign and harness their potential, empower them to think of their positive impact on Samoa and the world, and working to build a Samoa where every young Samoan has an opportunity to make a difference where they are heard of critical issues like climate change and women's empowerment.

Pacific Nurses Association gather to talk

By: Jasmine Netzler-Iose

The Pacific Islands Operating Room Nurses Association's (P.I.O.R.N.A.) Inaugural Conference and Annual General Meeting is currently underway in Apia.

Minister of Health, Valasi Luapitofanua To'omaga Tafito Selesele in his keynote address at the officially opening of the event at Lava Hotel at Sogi, noted that his is the first ever regional meeting of its calibre to be hosted in Samoa.

On behalf of the Samoan Government he applauded the Chairman/Madam Chair, Executive Members as well as affiliated members of the Pacific Islands Operation Room Nurses Association, for considering Samoa as the host of such important event like this conference.

Valasi says it is a golden opportunity for all nursing staff of Samoa to attend and further enhance their knowledge, and gain expertise on their areas of work, especially in operating rooms, which will contribute in promoting safe and quality health operation services, not only for the Pacific region, but for Samoa specifically.

Mentioning that sending all Samoan nurses overseas for capacity building trainings is very costly to the Samoa government.
